

Abstract of the invention

A router 104 can automatically self assess which of its interfaces are coupled to an active communication link and then identify which interface needs a new network address prefix. Existing and available network address prefixes can be utilized to automatically self configure interfaces as appropriate. The interfaces and their corresponding communication links that require a new address prefix can be flagged for subsequent attention.

5